Nearer still to thee be pressed.

Stanched at last the flickering light. None can help us, none but Heaven: Hand of God! art thou, too, stayed? Kiss me, father, then together Let us 'neath the sea be laid.

Kiss me, father-all is over, Let me yet but press thy lips; Rise the swelling floods still higher, Slowly sinks the shattered ship, Now, farewell farwell forever! Let me sink in thy embrace; When the waters cause me terror, Kiss me, father, hide my face.

CHAPTER XXIV THE STREAM GOES ON.

I was left with a strange benumbed feeling, and nothing seemed real but the heavy sense of wrong and disappointment My days were to go on but I thought, as Aunt Murdock had said, that what is really life was pretty much over with me-existence would be empty and, do really marry kings without knowing therefore, of little value. My which memory fills sufficiently well, although as I look back, the events that ocgurred seem to be seen through a mist, an effect not produced by distance. So appears father's disappointed, grieved face, full of a double pain. For a long time he blamed both Jerry and me, called it a lover's quarrel and said we must "make up." He had hoped large things for his daughter. And dimly, too, my silent brother Henry looks in my face with a questioning gaze, but utters no word of inquiry. Even the most real of all the things of those first few days, the comstock of money.' ment of Tommy-thoroughly village boy and thoroughly himself-has something of the bigness of objects seen through a mist. Though in the presence of others he discoursed with himself on this wise: "Chat and Jer ain't going to Europe atter, all and I shan't get that gun I was going to send for. Suppose I shall live jest as long though-maybe longer-if I don't have it-it can't kill me way there. Jer might have known things wouldn't go good when he stopped bringing me candy—s'pose he thought me too old—but I shouldn't have took to smoking if he hadn't. A fellow must have there's Henry calling you." something-and that was kind of a Thereupon Tommy took from his pocket and lighted a cigar, only to have it taken away by father who had not been supposed to be near.

In that strange time it was shown me how scanty and selfish had been my affection for the friends I had supposed I dearly loved, and who now proved that the world had not become a waste because the one on whom I had depended had ceased to bring me its treasures. If they could not gather gems, they could pluck living and fragrant flowers to cheer me, and they came with hands full of these they helped me more than I can tell. The evil report concerning Alick was not mentioned in my hearing again, and though I could not forget it, he made me trust him; he and Gracie were kind and tender as brother and sister could be. Nellie Webster came quickly to my side with unmentioned and unobtrusive sympathy, while aunt Murdock, who seemed especially sent to do me good, contrary to her intention on leaving home, remained with us until the last of November. MOTICE.

The citizens of Mexico and vicinity are earnestly requested to meet at En gine Hall, on Saturday evening, May 10, at 71 o'clock, to organize for the proper observance of Decoration Day. BY ORDER OF COM.

[We hope the meeting will be largely attended, and whatever plans are devised will be ably seconded by our citizens.

A: CARD. Mrs. Alvro Alfred and family desire to thank their many friends for the kindness and sympathy extended to them in their recent bereavement.

THE SILENT TEACHER.—We have been presented with this improved sectional map of the United States, which being in nicely fitting pieces, requires to be put together, and is one of the best ways of learning the positions and boundaries of the different States. It is put up in to prosper, and, with the other Tempera neat box, and is not only instructive but entertaining. Virgil has it for sale.

LEAMON'S ANALINE DYES.—These dyes are in liquid form, and sold by John C. Taylor only. Twelve different colors, but from these all shades and all colors can be made. They are the cheapest and most simple dyes in the world, and will color twice as much as the same quantity of any other dye. Call and examine. 25-3w

Each chapter begins with an embellished letter, these initials in the gospels being parts of emblematic designs, representing something recorded in the chapter. Besides, it contains 960 engravings, of which 100 are full page, 500 are half and three quarter page, and only a few are smaller than a quarter page. These illustrations are also one element of its completeness, not only attracting the attention of the most uninterested reader, but aiding all in forming clearer ideas of Scripture scenes and figures .-The volume also contains an invaluable Chronological Table, with important events occuring between the close of the Old Testament and the coming of Christ, so arranged as to make an epitome of all sacred history; a Concordance; a Dictionary of the offices and conditions of the four gospels, a New Testament Commentary, and fourteen accurate maps, besides full and complete marginal references.
